

NJR Patient Consent Form

National Joint Registry –

What does it mean for you as a patient?

About the National Joint Registry (NJR)

Replacements of hip, knee and ankle joints have become common and highly successful operations that bring many patients improved mobility and relief from pain. A number of people may at some time in the future need another operation on the same joint. This may occur for a variety of reasons, most commonly because the joint implant has worn out. There are many different types of implants, many of which do not have data on their long-term effectiveness. To further improve the success of this surgery, the Department of Health and the Welsh Assembly Government have set up the National Joint Registry (also known as the NJR) to monitor the performance of joint implants.

The NJR is designed to record details of all hip, knee and ankle replacement operations in England and Wales. Both the NHS and the independent health care sector are included and to be successful the NJR needs to gather information on as many people having these operations as possible.

The benefits the NJR will bring to you;

The NJR data will be used to bring direct benefits to patients by:

- improving patient awareness of the outcomes of hip, knee and ankle joint replacement surgery
- finding out how long the different joint replacements last

- helping to identify individual patients who have received an implant and where there may be a need for urgent clinical review

The NJR data will also be used to bring additional long-term benefits by:

- providing feedback to orthopaedic surgeons and teams to help maintain high clinical standards
- promoting open publication about the performance of implants
- providing feedback on implant performance to regulatory authorities
- providing feedback to suppliers about the performance of their implants
- monitoring and comparing the performance of hospitals

Whilst the data collected by the NJR may be used for medical research, any personal information will be anonymised so that you cannot be identified. Research projects are subject to ethical review and scrutiny; they will only be permitted if the outcomes are expected to provide significant benefits to the healthcare of patients.

Personal information – what is required and why?

The information required for the NJR includes your personal details (shown below) and your operation details. It will link you to the implant(s) you receive as well as enabling the NJR to link your details to any future joint surgery you may undergo. This is essential if the NJR is to monitor implant performance.

If the performance of any implant is identified as being a problem, having your personal details in the NJR will help us to make contact with you. We may also contact you in the future to ask you to complete a patient feedback questionnaire.

Data collection – its security and confidentiality

The NJR uses an electronic system for data collection. The data is sent securely to a protected database, avoiding the need to send paper records through the post, to ensure your data receives maximum protection.

Your personal information is confidential and cannot be used outside of the NJR. Strict procedures are in place to protect your information and keep it confidential; it will only be available to you and your surgeon. If you wish, you can obtain access to a copy of your own record in accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998.

Your participation is voluntary

This form asks for your consent for your personal information to be recorded by the NJR. Your participation in the NJR is entirely voluntary. If you agree and then change your mind, you may revoke this permission at any time by contacting the NJR Centre. If you do not agree, data about your operation will be entered but without any personal details attached. This will ensure that individual operation details are not traceable back to you. If you have any questions or concerns or need further information on the NJR or your rights under the Data Protection Act 1998, please contact the NJR Centre.
